The session of the Belgrade Security Forum 2019 entitled “The ‘Big Bang Enlargement’: 15 Years Since the EU’s Greatest Accomplishment” focused on the 2004 enlargement of the European Union and its consequences 15 years on. The panellists explored current EU enlargement policies, especially in regards to the Western Balkans. Nathalie Tocci, Director of the International Affairs Institute in Italy, stated that the 2004 enlargement had its “dark” and “light” sides, but that it was certainly a historical necessity. She warned that it would be incorrect to apply the old enlargement policies to current circumstances in the Western Balkans and the EU. Bernd Hüttemann, Secretary General of the European Movement Germany, pointed out the success of the “Big Bang enlargement”, primarily as a shield against Russian influence in Central Europe, while Ivo Vajgl, a former member of the European Parliament from Slovenia, expressed his worries about the state of democracy, and especially media freedom, in Serbia.

Participation: The event involved 19 citizens, including participants from the city of Zagreb, Rijeka, Koprivnica (Croatia).

Location / Dates: The event took place in the Impact Hub, Zagreb (Croatia), 27/11/2019

Short description:

The aim of the event was to discuss whether there is a European dimension of education within the formal Croatian educational framework. To which extent this dimension (whose basic contents are European values, European citizenship, European identity, multilingualism and mobility) is really implemented in the Croatian educational system was discussed with Ivana Miočić (Assistant at the Department of Pedagogy, Faculty of Philosophy, University of Rijeka), Ante Babačić (teacher of Sociology, Zagreb Administrative School), Ivana Zelenika (teacher of Politics and Economics, Ethics and Civic Education, School of Transport, Zagreb), Olja Brajčić (Geography teacher, X. Gymnasium, Zagreb) and Stojanka Lesicki (Librarian, St. Peter Orehovec OS) during a panel discussion that took place in Zagreb (Impact Hub) on November 27th 2019.

The interest in the European dimension in education in Croatian scientific and research circles has been evident in the last two decades, especially after Croatia's accession to the European Union.

Ivana Miočić presented research findings showing that geography teachers recognize different challenges in the process of implementing content of the European dimension in education; disinterestedness of students, outdated textbooks, time, organizational and material conditions... The teachers are facing these and similar challenges as well. They pointed out that the implementation of the European dimension in the educational system in Croatia is largely left to particular teachers; their motivation and their personal engagement.

All participants in the panel, both primary and secondary school teachers, recognize Erasmus+ programs as a great opportunity to promote knowledge of Europe. This is an opportunity, they say, to learn about new places, foreign customs and tradition, but also internalize what we call European values.

Although they generally express a positive general picture of the European Union, most of the research respondents presented by Ivana Miočić (Ledić, Miočić and Turk, 2016) admit that topics related to the European dimension in education hardly, if at all, find their way to the students. Therefore, teachers who recognize the importance of the European dimension in education, who find a time and a way to teach those topics in schools, should be motivated and encouraged.
